THE SUN ALWAYS SHINES IN SPACE

Everyone keeps promising summer! Jamie Oliver even proclaims "Here comes the sun!" on his Notting Hill shop window. The coming of the sun, rather like the prodigal son is a myth in the making and of course it's coming – but when?

No doubt by the time this magazine is printed and distributed I will look idiotic and we will all be basking in ethereal sunshine – but at the moment I am a cynic and the jet-stream has gone south and I am heralding a new ice age.

So now – more than ever – we purveyors of fine London brick and mortar are having to get our buyers to imagine the light streaming through the windows, their children playing in the garden, shaded from the sun under the mottled light of the magnolia's canopy.

But then we are creative breed and can shine the light even on the darkest of days.
